

Media bias against Lingenfelter obvious

Editor:

I would like to share my observations about the current election in Saskatchewan.

Am I the only voter that perceives great bias and manipulation through the media coverage? It appears that the media do not want the average Saskatchewan voter to be informed about the issues. In addition, they seem to be promoting voter apathy. This election is not over – and as citizens, it is imperative that we all inform ourselves, and exercise our right to vote.

In partnership with the media, the Sask Party appears to be focused on a negative campaign against the NDP leader, Dwain Lingenfelter. If the career choices made by Mr. Lingenfelter some 10 or 15 years ago are so compelling, then why are they not revealing similar information about Brad Wall and all of his undertakings, including his involvement with the Grant Devine government? Who really believes this information is relevant. Ironically, the Sask Party ads launch an attack against Dwain Lingenfelter as a downbeat leader, yet it is the Sask Party who continue to distract from the real issues as they pander their negativity.

I would like to hear both parties talk about the issues – how are they going to make Saskatchewan a better place to live for working people and their families? What advances will they achieve in the health care sector that will improve the quality of publicly funded care options and will focus on the entire health care delivery team? Will they acknowledge the need to invest in our education system to provide the necessary resources for teachers to manage growing classroom sizes? Will they commit to improve the funding for our community-based organizations, as they are currently in greater demand than ever before?

How will they make life in Saskatchewan more affordable? When we all benefit from our growing economy?

I hope that my observations are shared with others – but I hold no real confidence that the newspaper will respect my offer of constructive criticism. Let's permit the voters in Saskatchewan to choose our next government, shall we?
